TO BLAME DEAD ENGINEER FOR FATAL NEW HAVEN CRASH

New Haven, Conn., Feb. 23.—W. H. Curtis, dead engineer of local train that crashed into rear of Connecticut River special near Milford, Conn., killing 9 persons and injuring 75, today seemed likely to be blamed for the crash, the most spectacular in New Haven's list of disasters. The local, it was said, passed two block signals which were "set" when the train ahead stopped because of a defective air hose.

"Volume of business the company has been handling," said President Elliott of the New Haven, "has been far greater than ever before in its history and the facilities of the road have been severely taxed. Officers and men have been under a severe strain in trying to give service."
